

Managing the Global HR Challenge

Aligning Employment and Labor Practices with Your Company's Overseas Business Strategies

November 10-12, 2008 | Lake Buena Vista, FL

As companies continue to become more globalized, HR faces a challenge in ensuring that your company's various operations share a common corporate culture and values while adapting to the legal, economic and social realities of each region. The purpose of this three-day course is to expose labor relations and other human resource executives based in the United States to an overview of the systems in Europe, Asia, South America and the Pacific Rim to enable them to more effectively interact with their counterparts in these regions and influence their companies' U.S. policies accordingly. The instructors for the course are Tom Hayes and Alan Wild of the Brussels European Employee Relations Group and Auret van Heerden of the Fair Labor Association. The presentation also includes global labor and employment relations experts from various HR Policy Association member companies.
